

TERRA MCCRAE-GREENE

Terra McCrae-Greene initially taught middle school Spanish from 2015-2020 in Maryland public schools, where she also worked as a homeschool educator for grades 6-12 for the Office of Home and Hospital Teaching. Prior to being in the classroom, she was a Community Ambassador for Spanish-speaking students, working with Pupil Personnel Workers to promote school attendance and academic achievement. An avid reader and creative writer, she is committed to K-12 literacy, currently teaches Middle School English Second Language Educator within the District of Columbia Public Schools (DCPS), and serves as an adjunct professor of Family Literacy ESOL at a local community college.

Terra has a passion for learning and teaching languages and is an EdTech aficionado. She is pursuing a Ph.D. in Instructional Systems and Workforce Development at Mississippi State University to further investigate the correlation between literacy, educational technologies, and employment for English Learners. Read more about her work in the blog archives of Embodying a Multilingual Perspective at <https://lovingl2.blogspot.com>.