

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

An Irish Tale

The Giant's Causeway is in Ireland. It is in the north. It is a rock formation. The rocks are shaped like hexagons. Volcanic activity under the water formed the rocks. But an old Irish tale offers a different explanation.

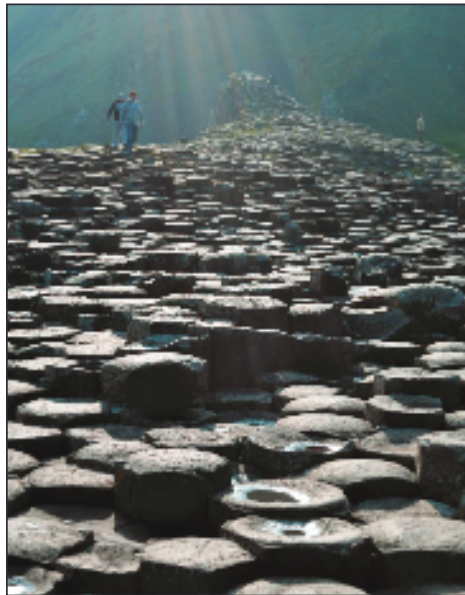

Long ago, lived a giant named Fionn MacCumhaill. This was his Irish name. He later became known as Finn MacCool. So that's what we'll call him.

Finn lived on the northern tip of Ireland. He could see the tip of Scotland from the shore. In Scotland, lived another giant. He was known as the Red Giant. He had fiery red hair.

One day, the Red Giant began to yell insults at Finn. He called Finn mean names. This made Finn angry.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

Finn challenged the Red Giant to a real fight. The other giant agreed. Finn didn't want to get his feet wet crossing the water. So he built a causeway. A causeway is a stone path. Today, this path is known as the Giant's Causeway.

Voytazb6 via Wikimedia Commons

Hexagon-shaped stones on the Giant's Causeway

Finn crossed it to Scotland. He saw the Red Giant in the distance. He was huge! He was far bigger than Finn. Finn fled! He ran home. The Red Giant chased Finn. Luckily, Finn had a good head start.

Finn slammed the door behind him. He told his wife Oonagh what happened. Luckily, she was a smart woman. She knew just what to do. Oonagh pushed Finn into a huge cradle. Then she covered all but his face with a sheet.

Soon after, the Red Giant got to the house. He began to bang on the door. Calmly, Oonagh opened the door. She invited him inside.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

“Where is that coward, Finn MacCool,” the Red Giant demanded.

“Why, he’s out tending to the cows right now. Why don’t you sit down and have some tea,” said Oonagh soothingly.

The Red Giant was still very angry. He didn’t want any tea.

“Bring me Finn MacCool right now,” he demanded.

“Calm down,” said Oonagh. “I can’t bring him too you. He’s out in the pasture with the cows. But you can see our baby while you wait.” Oonagh brought the Red Giant over to the crib.

The Red Giant looked at the giant creature inside the crib. He became very scared. If Finn’s baby is this big, Finn himself must be huge, the giant thought.

The Red Giant shook with fear. He fled from Finn’s house. He ran back to Scotland. He destroyed a lot of the causeway on his way back. He didn’t want Finn to follow him. The Red Giant was never seen again. But what’s left of the causeway remains until this day.

By Chmee2 (Own work) via Wikimedia Commons

The Giant's Causeway

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

An Irish Tale

The Giant's Causeway is an unusual rock formation. It is found in Northern Ireland. The Causeway is made up of hexagon-shaped rocks. Scientists believe that the volcanic activity under the water formed these unusual rocks. But an old Irish tale offers a different explanation.

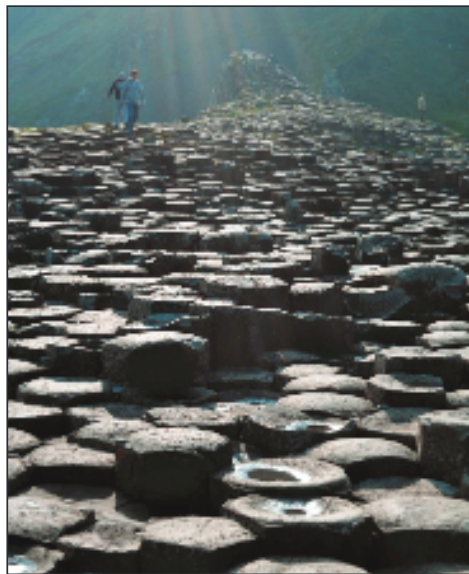

Long ago, lived a giant named Fionn MacCumhaill. This was his Irish name. As time passed, this same giant came to be called Finn MacCool, so that's what we'll call him.

Finn lived along the northern tip of Ireland. Finn could see the tip of Scotland across the North Channel. In Scotland, lived another giant. This giant's name was Benandonner, but he was often known as the Red Giant. He had fiery red hair and a long wild beard of the same color.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

One day, the Red Giant began to yell insults at Finn. He called Finn all sorts of mean names. Finn could ignore the names. But then the Red Giant began to say that Finn was a wimp, that he was a weak fighter. This made Finn angry.

Finn challenged the Red Giant to a proper fight. The other giant accepted. Finn didn't want to get his feet wet crossing the North Channel. So he built a causeway out of stones and walked across. A causeway is a stone path. Today, the path Finn built is known as the Giant's Causeway.

Hexagon-shaped stones on the Giant's Causeway

Finn finished the causeway. He crossed it to Scotland. When he saw the Red Giant, Finn ran back the way he came. From afar, Finn could tell that the Red Giant was far larger than he was. The Red Giant chased Finn home. Luckily, Finn arrived a few moments before the larger giant.

Finn slammed the door behind him. He breathlessly described all that had happened to his wife, Oonagh. Luckily, Oonagh was a smart woman and knew just what to do. She pushed him into a huge cradle. Then she covered all but Finn's face with a sheet.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

Soon after, the Red Giant began to bang on the door. Calmly, Oonagh opened the door and invited him inside.

"Where is that coward, Finn MacCool," the Red Giant demanded.

"Why, he's out tending to the cows right now. Why don't you sit down and have some tea," said Oonagh soothingly.

The Red Giant was still very angry and didn't want any tea.

"Bring me Finn MacCool right now," he demanded.

"Calm down," said Oonagh. "I can't bring him too you because he's out in the pasture with the cows. But you can see our baby while you wait." Oonagh brought the Red Giant over to the crib.

When the Red Giant looked at the giant creature inside the crib, he became very scared. If Finn's baby is this big, Finn himself must be gigantic, the giant thought.

The Red Giant began to tremble in fear. He fled from Finn MacCool's house and ran back to Scotland over the causeway. He destroyed much of the causeway on his way back, for he was scared that Finn would try to follow him. The Red Giant was never seen in Ireland again. But what's left of the causeway remains until this day.

By Chimeez (Own work) via Wikimedia Commons

The Giant's Causeway

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

An Irish Tale

The Giant's Causeway is an unusual rock formation found in Northern Ireland. The Causeway is made up of hexagon-shaped rocks. Scientists believe that the volcanic activity under the water formed these unusual rocks, but an old Irish tale offers a different explanation.

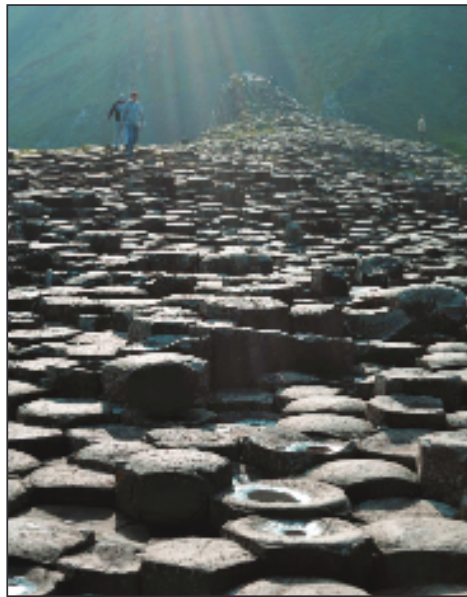

Long ago, lived a giant named Fionn MacCumhaill. This was his Irish name. As time passed, this same giant came to be called Finn MacCool, so that's what we'll call him.

Finn lived along the northern tip of Ireland where he could see the tip of Scotland across the North Channel. In Scotland, lived another giant, named Benandonner. This giant was often known as the Red Giant because he had fiery red hair and a long wild beard of the same color.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

One day, the Red Giant began to yell insults at Finn. He called Finn all sorts of mean names. Finn could ignore the names. But then the Red Giant began to say that Finn was a wimp, that he was a weak fighter. This made Finn angry.

Finn challenged the Red Giant to a proper fight. The other giant accepted. Finn didn't want to get his feet wet crossing the North Channel. So he built a causeway out of stones and walked across. A causeway is a stone path. Today, the path Finn built is known as the Giant's Causeway.

Voylazz86 via Wikimedia Commons

Hexagon-shaped stones on the Giant's Causeway

Finn finished the causeway. He crossed it to Scotland. When he saw the Red Giant, Finn ran back the way he came. From afar, Finn could tell that the Red Giant was far larger than he was. The Red Giant chased Finn home. Luckily, Finn arrived a few moments before the larger giant.

Finn slammed the door behind him. He breathlessly described what happened to his wife, Oonagh. Luckily, Oonagh was a smart woman. She knew just what to do. She pushed him into a huge cradle and covered all but Finn's face with a sheet.

Soon after, the Red Giant began to bang on the door. Calmly, Oonagh opened the door and invited him inside.

Finn MacCool and the Giant's Causeway

"Where is that coward, Finn MacCool," the Red Giant demanded.

"Why, he's out tending to the cows right now. Why don't you sit down and have some tea," said Oonagh soothingly.

The Red Giant was still very angry and didn't want any tea.

"Bring me Finn MacCool right now," he demanded.

"Calm down," said Oonagh. "I can't bring him too you because he's out in the pasture with the cows. But you can see our baby while you wait." Oonagh brought the Red Giant over to the crib.

When the Red Giant looked at the giant creature inside the crib, he became very scared. If Finn's baby is this big, Finn himself must be enormous, the giant thought.

The Red Giant began to tremble in fear. He fled from Finn MacCool's house and ran back to Scotland over the causeway. He destroyed much of the causeway on his way back, for he was scared that Finn would try to follow him. The Red Giant was never seen in Ireland again. But what's left of the causeway remains until this day.

By Chmee2 [Own work] via Wikimedia Commons

The Giant's Causeway